

Saint Leo begins MBA program

By Jennifer Headley
Associate Editor

On January 15, 1994 Saint Leo College began offering its MBA program to students in Weekend College. Dr. Marvin Travis, professor of management who oversaw the implementation of the program as dean of the Division of Business Administration, also provided the Monarch with a history of the program's development.

Several years ago the president of Saint Leo College requested that the school start an MBA program, but at that time Saint Leo lacked the faculty to commence such a program. Last year, the idea of an MBA program was reconsidered. By that time there were sufficient doctoral-qualified faculty to facilitate the program.

A survey was then conducted to see how interested people would be in an MBA program. There was a large response along with several requests for this particular program. Business leaders, along with Dr. Ed Doran, vice president for academic affairs, also expressed interest in this particular type of program. The program was then approved by the president and his council, and along with a generous grant from Mr. James Heagerty, enough money was funded to create a professional atmosphere for this program with the James Heagerty Executive Business Suite.

The MBA program consists of 12 courses, with 36 semester hours total. There are three semesters per year. Forty-three students are enrolled in the initial classes, four or five of whom are graduates of the college week-day programs. Two courses are given per semester. The program will take two years to complete.

Classes are conducted every other weekend, and each class will meet for eight sessions. This will allow the student to have enough time to be with his or her family, and work at a full time job. The program stresses communication and ethical business practices in hopes that the people can deal more effectively with colleagues in their businesses.

Saint Leo College is also considering offering a masters program in health care related businesses, which would consist of additional elective courses in specialized areas. This program would allow them to pursue a graduate program while they get situated in their work life.

Environmental science as a major?

By Jennifer Headley
Associate Editor

The focus on today's society is leaning toward protecting and restoring the environment. A large majority of people today find employment in the area of environmental science, whether it is animal protection or testing the air and water quality of an area. Along with the growing number of people interested in the environmental field is the need for proper training and qualifications to work. The need for the qualifications has led development of an environmental science major.

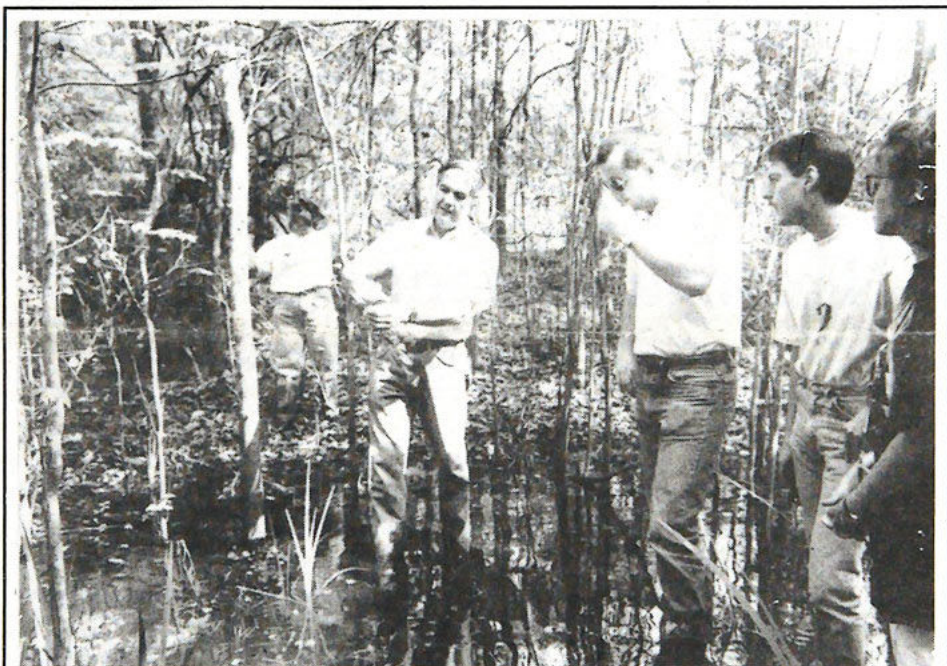

People who wanted jobs as environmental scientists were required to be biology majors, and although the goals of the environmental scientists are similar to the goals of doctors as far as science went, many were quick to point out that there are many different classes that are necessary for the environmental scientists that are lacking in the biology major. These include classes in topography, environmental ethics, speech, geoscience, cultural anthropology, and economics.

Saint Leo College is establishing an environmental science major that, if approved in February by the Board of Trustees, will commence in the fall semester of this year. Dr. Patricia Dooris, in Saint Leo College's Math and Science department, will head the program.

Dooris stated that, "Unlike the programs at the University of Florida and the proposed plans for the environmental science major at University of South Florida, the emphasis of this major at Saint Leo College will center more on the science and working in the environment rather than just the environmental law and ethics. We would be able to build upon the biology major and prepare the students properly for a career in environmental protection. The program would both train and prepare the student for any career in the environmental science major. The school will not only train you, but will also assist you in finding a job and/or an internship in your field of interest."

If Saint Leo gets its final approval next month, it will be one of the only colleges to have a full environmental science major. There would also be two new programs in association with the new science major, one of which is a student connection called the National Association of Environmental Professionals. They supply information on a network of job opportunities. The other would be an advisory board to work with people enrolled in the environmental science program. Here, environmental professionals, some of whom will be Saint Leo alumni, will also help students discover job opportunities and to them use what experience that they have acquired in order to obtain jobs in their area of interest.

"The classes would promote interest in the manner that there would be field trips and that many of the classes would consist of hands-on training rather than just the usual text book knowledge of the subject," said Dooris.

There will be more news and information on the subject pending approval. Students will be welcome to find out what career opportunities exist in this field or just take interesting classes that might broaden their view of the growing changes and needs of the environment.

Business Administration and Education/Human Services merge

By Thomas Turcotte
Editor

Recently the administration announced yet another change in the academic structure of the college. The Division of Business Administration and the Division of Education and Human Services will be merged into the Division of Professional Studies. According to Monsignor Frank M. Mouch, president of the College, "This change in the academic structure responds to the institution's need to improve the economy and efficiency of the administration of academic programs." The two prior deans of the merged divisions will return to their faculty positions, and a search will be held for new dean to head the Division of Professional Studies.

In the search for the new candidate, several criteria will be used. The candidate should be able to cooperate with other administrators in furthering the College's reputation in the community, and therefore assure the College's success in the future. The candidate should also possess a Ph.D. in a division-related major. Business doctorates will receive higher consideration.

Additionally, the candidate should have a successful background in administrative experience that will be conducive to a position academic dean. The candidate must be able to encourage faculty to participate in their disciplines outside of the campus. The candidate should be able to locate outside financial support for the college. Finally, the candidate must be able to attract students to the college.

Advertisements for the position will be placed in "The Chronicle of Higher Education."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

This letter is in response to last issue's column of "Ron's World". I am writing this letter without the knowledge of any of the Student Leadership Coalition, not in a collaborated defense, but simply to share another view point with the Monarch readers. I am of the opinion that the writer of "Ron's World" misjudged Thimir Kaddouri's motive in why the constitution of the Student Leadership Coalition has been amended. It was not to create more executive power for the president or any other officer. It was an honest effort to create a working document that would serve the Student Leadership Coalition better.

The basic substance of the new constitution was derived from combining the old SGA and CUB constitutions and by-laws. The process was a painstaking, time-consuming, and apparently, thankless job. Many, many hours - most likely, more than any of his predecessors - were spent by Thimir trying to make this constitution the best it could be for everyone involved. While most of our students were away this past summer, Thimir remained on campus employed by the College. However, much of his free time was spent working, thinking, and planning for the upcoming year and the Student Leadership Coalition. He wasn't entirely alone. When possible, he enlisted the help of other officers like Mike Brewer and Sean Lahey. I, too, assisted in and witnessed many weary sessions of the re-writing of the SLC constitution and the compilation of the Discount Booklet. All of this may not be known to you Monarch readers.

Furthermore, I would like to say that the current SLC executive board, as well as last year's, has been an outstanding group of students to administer. In my nearly ten years at Saint Leo College, I have never worked with a more dedicated group than this. Together, we have taken two student leadership bodies (the SGA and the CUB) and combined them to make a more cohesive and powerful leadership organization. Yes, it has taken some zealous, committed, and dependable students. In the process, compromises and sacrifices have been made, many lessons (outside the classroom) have been learned, and even friendships tested. But a new road has been furrowed. This road was built not just to benefit a few SLC officers for some short-lived semesters here at Saint Leo, but for the future. It has taken a very special person to be at the helm during this time. I commend Thimir Kaddouri, and all of the SLC officers, board members, and committees who have worked so diligently since the Fall of 1992.

I don't wish to belabor this constitution thing, but, for those who may not know, I would like to say that changes in the constitution and by-laws could have been made (discounting the motive) without ever taking them to the senate. The best interest of the entire student body was considered when weeks of senate meeting time was taken on passing this new constitution. Ron, you had to admit at the end of your article that your knowledge of Thimir's motive was unknown when you said, "Whatever the actual motivation was..." and exactly what was Thimir "caught" at anyway? Your article sounds to me like you are upset that Dan Ferraras did not run for president last year - he could have, you know. He wasn't planning to be in South Carolina at election time. Or what about you? If the students elect Thimir or anyone else as their president, they still have the right to speak their opinions. But please, the Monarch should not be a place for a vindictive personal attack on anyone.

Speaking of the Monarch, I, unlike the "nameless" faculty member quoted in this article, will proudly sign my name. I also knew John Kaddouri, Thimir's older brother, and he was a big man on campus and left a reputation many would find difficult to follow, but Thimir should not be victimized by comparisons of him and his brothers. And I will further state that I believe it has been long established that teachers and parents can do harmful injustice when comparing siblings to one another. It is too bad that one of our faculty members has shamelessly done that very thing here at Saint Leo.

I can't speak for everyone who has read Ron's column, but I can say for many of those whom I have talked to, they agree with me when I say that the school paper is not a place for a nasty personal assault. Criticize, yes, but let us do it in a kinder manner.

Ex mea sententia

By Fredrick R. Ramlow

Two things have been occupying my mind and my time lately. The first has dealt mainly with my time. As of November first my wife and I moved up to the Saint Leo area. While it's great to have a place of our own, and I really don't miss my 40 mile drive every morning, there is a downside. This downside is the actual act of moving. To me, moving ranks right above Chinese water torture and right below the rack.

What is the reason for this ranking? Well face it, being tied down and having water dripped down on you sounds pretty boring, and moving is not at all boring. But, moving has nowhere near the arm popping excitement of the rack. Mostly, I just hate trying to get everything organized again. [Proofreader's note: You?!? your wife, you mean. Author's note: yes, Me!!!]. This is especially hard when I'm in school and working 30+ hours a week, and my wife is working two jobs. Needless to say, It's taken about two weeks to make the place even borderline livable. To put it all in a nutshell, "I hate moving."

Now on to the more serious stuff. Pay attention now. "Oh, where did I put that soapbox. Ah! Here it is. Now to business." I have had a number of people ask me to write a column about crime and violence. I really didn't want to do this because I felt that unless the article was book length I wouldn't be doing justice to the topic. Besides, every time I think about how our so-called government has handled violence in this country my blood pressure goes through the roof!

Something I heard on the radio a couple of weeks ago changed my mind. I was driving to work, and turned on a talk show host I normally Don't listen to very much. His name is Lionel, and he was on WFLA 970 AM between 4pm and 7pm weekdays. I wasn't able to listen to the whole show, but the parts that I was able to hear blew my mind.

Lionel was having his listeners call into the radio station and describe the gun they carried. Then, he had them lock and load in into the phone receiver so that you could hear it over the radio. Here I am driving down the road listening to the "click, click" of 9mm's, 45 cal's and other assorted pistols on the radio. This would be strange enough on a conservative radio show, but Lionel had always struck me as rather liberal.

I believe that every citizen has the right to own a gun, but this was a little too much for me. After I got to work and hit the reset button on my brain a few times, I started thinking about the future of our country. Is crime so bad that even "good" liberals are packing a gun?

My conclusion is "yes," crime is that bad. What is worse, crime has gotten so bad that I think citizens are not too far away from actively taking matters into their own hands. This idea bothers me terribly. I don't want to live in a country where criminals are rounded up and hung from the telephone poles like dangling fruit. I want criminals to be put in prison where they belong, and not hung by mobs of fed-up people. Why? Because those fed-up people usually go beyond the criminals and start

Ron's World

Ron's World

Ron's World

HEY THERE!

Yep, it's me again.

You know, I was thinking about something one day last semester, and I wanted to bounce it off of you. See if this is something you've noticed before.

First a little background.

Picture this scene:

I'm sitting in my room saying to myself, "OH MY GOD, FINALS ARE COMING!!! WHAT AM I GOING TO DO??? AAAHHHH!!! I HAVE TO THINK OF SOMETHING TO GET MY MIND OFF OF THIS BEFORE I GO BLIND!!!!"

I cast my fevered gaze around the room, and my glazed, bloodshot eyes fall heavily upon the Saint Leo College Telephone Directory.

In a surge of desperation, I snatch it up and begin reading.....

Here's what I found out.

If you take all of the teachers at this school (this includes full-time, part-time and adjuncts) the number you end up with is about 74.

Now, when you consider that an adjunct instructor makes about one thousand dollars per semester, and that over the course of four months that comes to roughly $62.50 per week, one can reasonably infer that the people who come up with those amounts don't count them for much so I'll just take them out of that first count for the purposes of my musings here.

That leaves us 57.

Now let's take a look at the other side of the school: The administration.

If you pick up a phone directory and look at just what could be considered upper-level administrative positions, you would find that we have one president, four vice presidents, two associate vice presidents, one assistant to the president, twenty-three directors, six assistant directors, and seventeen coordinators for a grand total of fifty-four upper-level administrators.

Let's think about that for a minute.

That means that there are .947 administrators for every faculty member, so I guess that nearly every teacher could have an administrator of his or her own.

It seems that this would also mean that with each faculty member having their own administrator, no faculty member should ever have to worry about making any kind of a decision, since that's what administrators are for, right?

Damn fair of them to keep hiring more and more administrators to take more and more of the weight off of these well-respected, well-taken-care-of teachers who the administration obviously thinks so much of, right?

After all, it is things like bureaucratic red tape, petty political in-fighting and constant butt-covering that makes this place the utopian society that it is, right?

And really, hiring just a few more administrators isn't going to cost the students any more money, right?

Wrong. wrongwrongwrongwrongwrong.

All we seem to be hearing lately is how this program is being cut because of money and how that department is being cut because of money. Would somebody please tell me where all of this new money going to the athletic department is coming from? We haven't got enough people to fill all of the residence halls now, and yet we're building another one....? Every time we turn around, there's some new guy in a suit walking around, being in charge of something that probably existed for a long time and quite well without some guy in a suit being in charge of it. Is there anyone here besides me who remembers the time that the school got some windfall/donation/grant amount of money and the powers that be decided that it should be used to re-carpet the administration offices?

Maybe it's just a matter of spending money more wisely and on important things, like quality education. I imagine, however, that we'll end up hiring some outside agency to come in and spend nine months and half-a-million dollars to tell us that we need to spend money more wisely and on important things, like quality education.

Or maybe we'll just get a provost.

Oh yeah, that's the latest thing. It looks like we're staring right down the business end of getting a provost now. Oh sure, they probably won't call him a Provost anymore, (since that's a potentially threatening-sounding title and we wouldn't want to frighten anyone) and he will, in all actuality, probably be given the title of executive vice-under secretary in charge of..... something, but he'll still be a provost.

What's a provost? Well, for our purposes, a provost is someone who does all of the things that the president is supposed to do so that the president can jet off to some other country and tell people about how this school is more interested in spending their money on quality education than on hiring provosts.

What I'm basically getting at here is that the place seems to be acquiring more management than the Chrysler Corporation had just before they nearly went under.

People seem to be forgetting that this place is supposed to be more of a school than a business.

I borrowed our editor's All God King Monster Dictionary of Doom and actually looked up the word "school," just to see if I was right about the definition. There were a lot of variations on the theme, but they all essentially said the same thing. They said that a school is a place where people go to learn. For that it seems that you would need, as was once said by Dr. Woodard, "teachers and students.... and some chalk would be nice." We've definitely got teachers, some of the best I've ever known. We've got students, and most of them are some fine, hardworking young people. If a departments' budget can handle it, we can usually find chalk. We've also got some real fine support staff who keep up on the day-to-day administrative paper that keeps things moving. It doesn't seem that we'd need more than that, and it's a sure thing that we don't need one more associate second deputy under vice assistant provost in charge of pay phones, flush toilets, and intra-institutional administrative data control.

But then, what do I know? After all, I'm just a student here.

'Til next time, be good and be careful.

-RON

P.S.- Check out the responses to last issue's RON'S WORLD. Looks as though if Thamir ever runs out of political momentum, sainthood is always an option.

WHICH IS GOOD AND AS IT SHOUL....oh, stop.

Letter to the Editor:

Dear Ron of Ron's World,

As someone who really knew John Kaddouri, as I went to school here 1986-1988, I wonder if there is a shadow for Thamir to follow? In John's year as SGA President the challenges he faced were different from Thamir's today. In 1986, we were losing a College president, getting the controversial archway designed and built and many other situations were arising that were often tense and leading to radical movements.

This is not to say that Thamir has not faced challenges such as student apathy, curriculum changes and so forth, but truly one Kaddouri trait stands out: that is to be involved in student leadership and activities. No two brothers may have the same personalities but knowing both, they are trustworthy, caring and hardworking.

I thought you might enjoy my following paraphrase of some quotations by Dr. Samuel Johnson:

All poets, writers, statesmen and Student Government Presidents must run that gauntlet of criticism, erected by peers who imagine it their duty to stand as sentinels, jealousy guarding the avenues of success. They know also that posterity may grant that approval which envy may now deny, and that he whom nature has made weak and idleness keeps ignorant, may yet support his vanity by the name of a critic.

Cyndee Pitts, Class of 1988

on people that just piss them off. Translation: it's called anarchy, and if you really want to destroy a country fast and kill a large amount of people, anarchy will do it. So hanging them all is definitely not a solution to the crime problem.

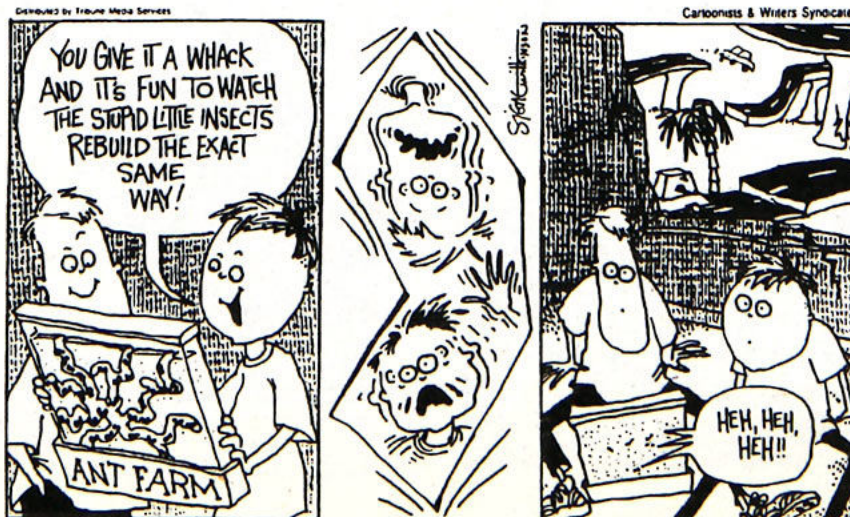

What is the solution? Well, I have a rather novel idea I thought up a few years ago. It's rather easy, all it requires is that we pass one law. This law would be that every politician would be required to live in the highest crime area in his or her district or city. Imagine the mayor of Tampa having to live in "suitcase city" (a high crime area around USF). After one week of this I think you would see something done, and this something would probably be pretty drastic.

But, if this is too radical a solution for you, then there is something else we could do that would be equally simple. Let's get the government to keep criminals in jail for the length of their sentences. No gain time, no early release, and no get out of jail free card!

Finally, "yes", this will take more tax money. Good! I will gladly pay more taxes for safety. But, only for safety!!!

See you around campus.

Saint Leo appoints new V.P. for advancement

Special to the Monarch

After an extensive national search for a vice president for institutional advancement, Saint Leo College (SLC) decided that the best candidate was in their own back yard. David Koval, who has been serving as executive vice president of the college, was appointed to fill that position. The announcement was made Wednesday by Monsignor Frank M. Mouch, college president.

"The Board of Trustees and I feel that David's extensive knowledge of this institution and an awareness of its advancement needs made him the best selection for this position," said Mouch. "As the college continues its aggressive program for growth and development, we believe that having someone acutely aware of the institution's needs to implement that program will produce the best results in both fundraising and friendraising."

Koval has been at Saint Leo since 1975. He served for several years on the staff of the program providing college classes to the military, including a stint as director of the Ft. Stewart, GA resident center at MacDill AFB in Tampa. He was also a member of the computer design team for off-campus programs. In 1986 he was appointed dean of educational services, which included Weekend College, Evening College and the off-campus programs such as health care administration and teacher recertification. For the past year he has been serving as the college's executive vice president, overseeing among other responsibilities the formal process of strategic planning.

Prior to joining the staff at Saint Leo, Koval served as dean of men at St. Francis College in Pennsylvania, executive director of Tidelands Community School in Georgia and director of residential services at the University of Ohio at Athens.

His advancement experience includes a capital building fund campaign for Sandy Run Schools, Inc. in Georgia and a campaign to establish and build the first Catholic church in Liberty County, GA.

"I am excited about the opportunities in our advancement program," said Koval, "and the chance to structure and implement a cohesive fundraising plan."

Koval holds a bachelor's degree from St. Francis College, PA, has a master's degree from Ohio University and has done post-graduate work at Harvard.

The appointment is effective immediately. Koval will continue his administrative responsibilities for the intercollegiate athletics program.

Saint Leo names new academic V.P.

Special to the Monarch

Monsignor Frank M. Mouch, president of Saint Leo College, announced Jan. 3, 1994 that Dr. Edwin J. Doran has accepted the position of vice president for academic affairs. Doran has been serving in that capacity on a temporary appointment since September 2, 1993.

"We are delighted that Dr. Doran has accepted this position," said Mouch. "He has brought a great deal of expertise to every position he has had at this institution and I see our academic programs moving forward aggressively under his direction."

It has been a dual position for Doran, who also held the post of associate vice president for academic affairs for Distance Learning. In that position he was responsible for the operation and management of SLC's Evening and Weekend College programs, as well as the extension centers located on 11 military establishments.

He came to the administrative post from his faculty appointment as professor in the Division of Business Administration where he chaired the department of general business. He taught not only in the traditional campus programs, but also in the Center for Distance Learning. Doran also authored the feasibility study for the newly-established MBA program.

"I am excited about the college's potential growth as a Catholic institution that recognizes the needs of individual students and encourages their intellectual, spiritual, and physical development," said Doran. "My objectives are simple. With the faculty's support, I intend to strengthen the liberal arts core curriculum and to build upon it by offering new and enhanced professional programs that prepare our students to excel in their chosen careers."

Prior to joining the faculty of Saint Leo, Doran was a faculty member at the U.S. Naval Postgraduate School in Monterey, California. Doran also served for twenty years in the United States Marine Corps, retiring as a lieutenant colonel.

Saint Leo faculty member joins Leadership Tampa Bay

Special to the Monarch

Rebecca Olsen, director of the Saint Leo College Restaurant and Hotel Management Program, has been accepted for participation in the 1994 class of Leadership Tampa Bay. This is a leadership training program for key Tampa Bay area people who are committed to participating in the growth and development of the Bay area. The membership covers the spectrum from small business owners to corporate officers.

Olsen joined the faculty at Saint Leo prior to the Spring 1993 semester. The restaurant and hotel management program that she heads is one of the few four-year programs of its kind in the State of Florida. She has been responsible for introducing an active guest speaker program and for establishing an agenda of field trips to area hospitality facilities.

She received her bachelor of science in tourism/commercial travel and management at the University of South Alabama and her master's in convention and hospitality management at the University of Alabama. She is currently working on her Ph.D. in nutrition and social marketing at the University of South Florida.

Prior to coming to Saint Leo she served as catering manager at Saddlebrook Golf and Tennis Resort.

Students who make a difference at Saint Leo College

By Jennifer Headley
Associate Editor

Hello there! Well, here I go again talking about amazing people that few of you knew existed, that is if you had gone blind or have been living in a cave for the past few months. This time I bring to you Venezuelan-born Alfonso Segundo Fuminaya, and Georgia's own Rebecca Lynn Buller. These two students show how getting involved in Saint Leo activities has been a tremendous benefit to them.

Fuminaya, who came to Miami from Venezuela when he was 14, chose Saint Leo College for many specific reasons. First of all, while in Miami, he attended a Catholic high school. His counselor narrowed down his choices according to what he wanted out of a school, which was to have a Catholic rural college with a good hotel/restaurant management program. Upon his visitation to Saint Leo, Fuminaya realized that this was the place for him to continue his education.

Fuminaya enjoys the friendly atmosphere, as well as the one-on-one interactions between the teachers and the students.

"The teachers help and the services are there, but it is up to the students to take the initiative to really appreciate what this school has to offer," he said.

As for what this school's advantages are, Fuminaya talks of the wide diversity of students, since there are students who are both from here and abroad. This College also help students from other countries assimilate the good aspects of the American culture, providing a home-like atmosphere.

As it is important to get involved in the campus at large, Fuminaya has definitely made an overwhelming effort to do so. He has been a chairperson for both Circle K and CUB; vice-president for Circle K, S.L.I.S.A., Ambassadors, and Knights of Columbus; president of Hospitality Management Association, and International Food Service Association; and a member of R.O.T.C., American Marketing Association, Union of Latino Students, and the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity. He has won both the freshman and sophomore Merit Awards, and was named Outstanding Hospitality Student 1993 for the National Residential Association.

"I would recommend this school to everyone," he said. "Your college experience is what you make it. The resources are there, all you need is the interest to get the best out of it."

My next interview was with Rebecca Lynn Buller of Warner Robins, Georgia. Buller is an elementary education major who will graduate on April 30, 1994. Buller learned about Saint Leo from a catalogue of Southeastern Catholic colleges. She liked Saint Leo from its first initial appearance, and chose it because it was close enough to her sister in Tampa.

"What's so special about Saint Leo College?" She went on to explain "Anybody can succeed in anything that they want to, and you are encouraged to get involved in the campus activities. You get a chance to develop your leadership skills, as well as your self confidence and self esteem for the work force. The faculty departments do a wonderful job in pushing the students toward their goal. Students are more prepared for the real world at a small school. The teachers here know you and your potential, so they expect more out of you."

Buller has been involved in several activities at Saint Leo. These activities include being in charge of liturgy and music for Campus Ministry, as well as being vice president and an active member. In Circle K, she has been a committee chairperson, vice president, president of the district board, and lieutenant governor of Circle K, which is where she distributes all records and keeps memos of development and growth. Buller has been president of the Ambassadors, on the SLC Board of Trustees, an orientation leader, on the College Union Board, a member of BACCHUS, C.E.C., FFEA, Student Life Council, Cultural Diversity Committee, theater and Chorale, and the Fall Festival Committee.

Rebecca Buller is one of the most outstanding students at SLC. Among her many accomplishments is being the first student member of the Board of Trustees.

"I would recommend SLC to anyone who would like to develop themselves," Becky concluded.

Saint Leo names new administrator

Special to the Monarch

Jerry W. Dyer has been named assistant vice president for academic affairs, Center for Distance Learning (CDL), at Saint Leo College. The appointment was announced by Dr. Edwin J. Doran, vice president for academic affairs. The Center for Distance Learning includes resident centers on 11 military bases, Evening and Weekend College, extension centers and a large teacher recertification program.

Dyer has been at Saint Leo College for eight years joining the staff initially as an assistant professor and academic advisor in the division of business. Three years later he became the assistant dean for the Military Education Program, now part of CDL. In 1992, when all of the college's non-traditional programs were reorganized under the CDL umbrella, Dyer became operations officer for the entire, massive operation.

In his position as assistant vice president he will be responsible for overseeing all of the CDL operations throughout the state of Florida and on all the military establishments currently served by the institution.

SLC student celebrates his first child's birth

Special to the Monarch

Kip Kelly, a junior international studies and history major and a veteran of Operation: Desert Storm, and his wife Heike Kelly, a German citizen, experienced the joy of the birth of their first child. Daniel Patrick Kelly, their son, was born on January 23, 1994 at 10:44 a.m. The mother and child are completely healthy. Congratulations to both of you!

Marriott Food Service Update

By Jennifer Headley
Associate Editor

McDonald Center cafeteria has been on the move with great changes in its meal selection, in accordance with the needs and demands of the students. Do you need any proof? Just take a look around at how many more things are available at both lunch and dinner.

A new buffet bar has been installed during lunchtime. New food has been introduced on a trial basis. And there is a new discussion on giving prepaid vouchers to the students in order that the students would not need to carry money with them in the Snack Shack.

Marriott Food Service is always looking for your suggestions and ideas. Before you go and trash the cafeteria because they don't have whatever it is you're looking for, simply talk to a manager, and they will do their best to help you.

There is also a Food Service Committee, which is affiliated with the Student Leadership Coalition, that has discussion dinners on what the cafeteria is doing wrong or right and is a perfect chance to voice your opinions. Bring a friend who has concerns about the cafeteria too! For information on when this meeting is conducted, talk to a Marriott Food Service Manager, or go to the Food Service Office.

Student Food Survey:

This is a survey of the Saint Leo student body to determine their opinions on the quality of food services at Saint Leo College.

Saint Leo College's men and women basketball stars

By Shayne Horan

Chris Styers, who scored twenty-eight points in the team's recent dual with North Florida, continues to lead the team in many categories. He now leads in points per game, 18.7, blocks, 1.7, rebounds, 7.3, free throws attempted, 119, and free throws made, 78. Also Styers recently became seventh in the Sunshine State Conference in scoring.

Also Shawn Jennet, who scored 13 points, is making a bid for player of the year in the S.S.C. with 17.3 points per game and 6.1 rebounds, he is really impressing the league coaches. On a sour note for the men Chris Donley suffered a sprained ankle and is to be out for two to three games.

Finally in the women's action they dropped a decision to North Florida, 79-50. Their record now stands at 3-9, and 0-2 in the S.S.C. Although suffering a tough loss, Laketra Lofton continues her shooting ways, while averaging 12.6 points a game, and pulling down 6.8 rebounds a game, Lofton is looking quite good.

Men's tennis loses a tough one to Florida Tech

By Shayne Horan

The 1994 Saint Leo College men's tennis team was defeated in a tough match on Thursday, January 20, losing by a team score of 8-1, which left the Monarchs with one lone victory. Alex Cisneros, the number one man for the team, pulled out a 6-1, and 6-3 victory over Florida Tech's number one.

Although it was a tough loss, Coach Tim Crosby stated afterwards that he was very impressed with the team's plays. Suffering from freshman jitters really hurt the Monarchs; however, now that the team is aware of what they can expect, they hope to improve on Tuesday the twenty-fifth of January.

According to Coach Crosby, "This is the first time we have taken a set off Florida Tech in seven to eight years." The Monarchs will be at home on January 25 against University of Tampa, and again on the twenty-ninth against University of Florida. GO Netters!
